

Fast track to media success in Ipswich

Jodie Jurgs | 22nd Jan 2014 4:57 PM

NEW STARS: The Australian School of Performing Arts, Film and Television is starting classes at Ipswich Girls' Grammar School.

Rob Williams

IPSWICH is fast establishing itself as a performing arts hub, evident in the development of such amazing venues and companies as Studio 188 and Allula Productions.

Now, building on their 2013 success, the Australian School of Performing Arts, Film and Television seeks to further develop its base at the Grammar Schools of Ipswich, offering Screen Test Training in 2014.

In recognition of the strong calibre of student talent in the community, ASPAFTV offers Acting Training Courses out of the Ipswich Grammar School location.

However, their new offering specifically targets screen acting skills, helping students to record their very own screen test and show reel for real-world application in the Australian Arts Industry.

The choice to set up base at Ipswich Girls' Grammar School is an indication of the school's strong commitment to the Performing Arts, as they promote and encourage arts education, both in house and the wider school community.

This exciting addition to the co-curricular program means that you don't have to attend the school to learn from cutting-edge teachers and industry leaders.

Entry to the course is via video audition, with a one-minute monologue of the actor's choice to be performed, filmed and emailed to amanda@aspافتv.com.au.

Over eight weeks, the students will learn everything there is to know about the screen test, including audition material, television commercials, monologues, two-handed scenes and an action sequence.

Classes will be held at Ipswich Girls' Grammar School Drama block, Mondays 4-6pm from February 4.

For more information, phone 1300 345 688.