

Budding actors can learn to tread the boards at school's Coast location

FREYA BIDWELL
TXT4U REPORTER

THE Australian School of Performing Arts, Film and Television has opened the stage curtains on its very first Gold Coast location.

Budding actors living on the Gold Coast can now be a part of the Queensland-renowned actor training course every Friday night at the Robina Community Centre.

"This is an exciting venture for us at ASPA-FTV," said co-founding director Renata Einhaus. "An overwhelming number of calls from students and parents on the Gold Coast looking to join ASPA-FTV prompted us to take the leap and open a venue more convenient for kids on the Coast."

Gold Coast kids will have the opportunity to perform and learn from the very best, with the company founders having stellar experience in the field.

The company is founded by Two Small Blondes, a Brisbane-based Film and Television Production Company owned and operated by Amanda Hardwick and Ms Einhaus.

While Ms Hardwick has more than 15 years' experience as a performer in film, television and theatre production, Ms Einhaus has a set design and technical background for theatre, film and television.

Together they form an energetic team with a passion to put young Queensland performers at the forefront of Australia's performing arts industry.

"Our Gold Coast students will have the opportunity to audition and perform in our monologue and short scene show," Ms Einhaus said.

For further information about enrolments, visit the website aspafv.com.au

A quick warm-up before a performance.

On stage at QPAC, and soon Gold Coast kids will get the same opportunity.

Kids getting creative in the kitchen.